Creating Healthier Communities: Understanding the Link Between Urban Design & Public Health

Featuring the Former State Public Health Officer

Dr. Richard Jackson

Professor of Environmental Health, UC Berkeley School of Public Health

Dr. Jackson, co-author of the book "Urban Sprawl and Public Health: Designing, Planning, and Building for Healthy Communities," will address the role of the built environment in health, and examine how good community design can promote physical and mental health and help reduce chronic illnesses.

Wednesday, February 1, 2006

6:00 — 7:45pm

Doors open at 5:30pm

No-host bar available

Please note: The Forum will be held on the first Wednesday of each month through May 2006.
