COMMUNITIES OF FLOATING HOMES ARE NOT THE ANSWER FOR EVERY SQUATTER. INSTEAD, SQUATTERS WOULD SET UP HOUSES AT DAILY RATES. KEEPING ON ANYTHING THAT DUN'T SINK.
People have lived and worked on the water for as long a.
A floating village may have seemed an outlandish idea ten years ago. Today, the floating homes are a normal part of the scenery on the Fraser River.

Near left: The clean, contemporary architecture of the houses was an essential part of the developer's "good neighbourhood" policy, allaying community fears of floating slums.

Right: Living on the water means never having to mow the lawn, but the other amenities of suburban life — pets and garden — are still available.
